Keynote Speakers

No More LMS Secrets Craig Weiss

In this riveting presentation you will get the inside scoop of the LMS industry. Gain insight and knowledge that many vendors do not want you to know. Learn the feature sets you need today and what is coming in the next two years.

What Works in Social Learning Dr Ben Betts

In this session we will explore how to engage learners in being more 'social' in workplace learning, the value that can be created when social really works, and the realities of facilitating successful social learning experiences.

Preparing for Digital Badges Joyce Seitzinger

Want to know if badges are right for your organisation? In this session, we will explore: badge anatomy and design, how badges can support lifelong learning, and how badges can be used in communities, organisations and networks.

Innovation in Learning: Embracing disruptive technologies Patrick Crooks

Most industries are getting disrupted by new technologies, and the L&D and education sector is no different. Rather than seeing this disruption as a threat, we will examine which technologies boost training and development outcomes and efficiency and the barriers to innovation.

Learning in the Workplace of the Future Dr Anne Bartlett-Bragg

The nature of work is fundamentally changing. Collaboration is expected in activity-based workspaces, yet workplace learning relies on classroom sessions or eLearning programs with limited integration with work based activities. We will explore the future of work and learning, technologies that support the future workplace and how to design a sustainable and effective learning approach.

Learning Analytics: L&D's chance for recognition? Rob Wilkins

Big Data and the advantages of effective analytics provide organisations with crucial information and knowledge. L&D as a profession has the opportunity to develop the necessary skills to produce learning analytics that enable organisations with the capabilities to respond to competitive challenges.

Leading in the Learning Zone Dr Alastair Rylatt

One of the greatest challenges facing L&D professionals is how to hold managers and leaders to account for their standard of performance in learning, innovation and connection. In this session, we explore ways to generate leadership engagement that inspires greater levels of commitment to learning within your business, organisation or industry.
